Before the meltdown of 2007/8, everyone believed that ninja mortgages, CDOs and Madoff shares were legitimate because they “made money”. The same logic still holds sway in the commercialization of science. This lecture looks at the biotech startup firm, university technology transfer office, and for-profit bibliometrics to explore whether they might also be better understood as Ponzi schemes.